LIBERTY SHIPS

TWENTY YEARS LATER

By

ALEXANDER SHAW

1961

FOREWORD

During the War Years, 1941 to 1945, more than twenty seven hundred liberty ships were built in the United States. Like a living species many died in infancy, victims of the destruction of war. Throughout the years of their youth other individuals dropped out of the registers from the normal hazards of life. However, a large percentage has continued to exist in varying degrees of prosperity throughout two decades of life. The advancing years will take their toll until such time, who knows when, that the bones of the last liberty will be picked clean in the scrapper's yard or will come to rest for eternity at the bottom of the sea. Here the resemblance to living creatures ceases, for the liberties will leave no descendants. It is therefore the intent of this work to chronicle in statistic form the lives of these soon to be extinct ships from the beginning to the arbitrarily chosen date of January 1st, 1961.

As originally built the liberties fell into five basic and readily identifiable classes and designated by the government as follows:

The EC2-S-C1, by far the most numerous class, is a general cargo carrier of about 7200 gross tons, 1500 tons deadweight, and capable of eleven knots from single screw, reciprocating machinery. Generally they were named for famous, deceased Americans although there were not able exceptions to the rule.

The EC2-S-AW1 class consist of twenty four colliers named for well-known coal seams in the United States. These vessels are some twenty three feet shorter than the basic liberty and have their machinery located aft instead of amidships. Gross tonnage is about five hundred tons less, deadweight about five hundred more. Machinery and speed are the same as for the basic ship.

The Z-EC1-S-C3 designates a substantial group converted to tankers although there is little about their appearance to indicate the difference. The remaining two classes are the Z-EC2-S-C2, a conversion for the transport of Army tanks, and the Z-EC2-S-C5, a similar conversion for the transport of boxed aircraft. The last two are easily identified by their goal-post type masts.

In addition to the five basic classes there were many individual modifications for use as naval auxiliaries, training ships, hospital ships and the like. Indeed some of these were so completely changed as to have slight resemblance to the original design and, in fact, looked like small passenger liners. Since the war many liberties have undergone further modifications consistent with their peace-time pursuits. Most of the tankers have been converted to carry dry cargo, many have been lengthened. Some have been rigged with heavy-lift facilities, while others have been fitted for the carriage of bulk cargos. A few have had their steam engines replaced with diesels, while the government has experimented with various other types of machinery such as gas turbines and free-piston engines.

The first liberties appeared in 1941 under the ownership of the United States Maritime Commission, which agency was soon replaced by the United States War Shipping Administration. During the war many incomplete as well as completed vessels were turned over to the United States Navy or to our Allies under Lend-Lease agreements. Immediately after the war a large number of liberties were turned over not only to our Allies but also to our former foes, the Italians. Some of these appeared immediately in Lloyd's Register under the ownership of private concerns. However, some of the acquiring nations have maintained the nominal ownership throughout the years, placing the vessels in the hands of operating companies. Likewise, the United States itself made extensive use of operating companies for a few years after the war. Following this period and throughout the subsequent years, many liberties have been sold to private interests to pursue varied careers under many flags and different names, although a majority of them were relegated to vast lay-up anchorages in different parts of the country. From time to time ships have been withdrawn from this enormous armada for various purposes, with an increasing number being withdrawn each year for scrapping.

The following list of all the liberties, in its statistical form, does not attempt to detail the construction and career of each individual vessel but is limited to the essential facts which are given in the order shown below and as explained:

NAME

The first item in the list is naturally the name of the vessel when first commissioned or its launching name. A number of ships were laid down or launched under a Maritime Commission name only to have it changed by the Navy, Lend-Lease nation or some other agency prior to commissioning. Such names are distinguished in the list by the initials L.N. (Launching Name) following it. All names of vessels, whether original or subsequent, are printed in large case letters.

CLASS

Should the vessel be one of the four classes other than the basic EC2-S-C1, that particular class designation will appear within parentheses immediately after the ship's original name. The absence of any class designation indicates that the ship is of the basic EC2-S-C1 class.

BUILDER

Following the ship's original name and class designation is its builder and the builder's hull number. In the original volume "Libert Ships- A Middle Age Review" the vessel's official number appeared in this place. It was felt that the builder's name and hull number would identify the vessel for the researcher better than the official number. The builders' names have been somewhat abbreviated as shown below:

Alabama Drydock & Shipbuilding Co.	abbreviated to	Alabama
Bethlehem-Fairfield Shipyard Inc.	" "	Bethlehem Fairfield
California Shipbuilding Co.	" "	California

ORIGINAL OWNER

If the original owner is other than the Maritime Commission or War Shipping Administration, it is spelled out in the case of foreign governments, abbreviated to U.S.N. for the United States Navy.

SUBSEQUENT NAMES AND OWNERSHIPS

It is assumed that the original name and owner is represented by the letter a.; therefore subsequent names and ownerships are represented in order by the letters b., c., d. etc. These are given with the year of transfer when possible. As stated before ship names are printed in large case letters, and owners' names are printed in small case.

It should be noted that owners' names are as listed in Lloyd's Register only. In the previous edition owners' names were taken from a number of sources and are frequently in variance with those found in Lloyd's Register. Chartering companies and those operating in behalf of government have been omitted.

ALTERATIONS

Where such information is available in Lloyd's Register, alterations to structure and machinery have been included with dates.

FINAL DISPOSITION

Where vessels have been removed from documentation or have been stricken from naval lists, the reason therefore-- wrecked, scrapped, etc.-- complete with date is given.

Like "Liberty Ships-- A Middle Age Review" this volume would not have been possible without the assistance and hospitality of the author's good friends Jean and Kenneth Haviland, and therefore to them many thanks! Also we express deep appreciation to Paul E. R. Scarceriaux, President of The Belgian Nautical Research Association, who has kept the transatlantic mails full of invaluable notes for me. Also thanks to Paul Silverstone, of New York, whose accurate research in naval affairs has helped me to correct a number of "misunderstandings" in the previous volume.

LIBERTY SHIPS

Twenty Years Later

ADDENDUM NO. 1

ALEXANDER SHAW

FOREWORD

Presented herewith, a year after the original publication, is the first addendum to "Liberty Ships, Twenty Years Later". In addition to correcting various errors and supplying information missing in the original work, this addendum is intended to furnish those interested in liberty ships with a continuing account of surviving vessels as well as to write "Finis" for the many that have been scrapped and the few that were lost during 1961.

This list is a lengthy one, but as the once mighty fleet diminishes, it is bound to grow shorter each year. It is hoped to continue publication of addenda annually until the number of vessels is reduced to a point where annual publication becomes impractical. It may be, then, that publication will become biennial or even over longer periods.

Judging from the long lives of many of the World War I standard vessels, there is little doubt that this work must be completed eventually by other hands. However, it is hoped that what we do to-day will make the task easier for such future historians
